Everyday is Earth Day

The Town of New Glasgow was honoured to welcome Elder Dr. Albert Marshall to our Community Climate Change Steering Committee meeting this week.

Elder Marshall is a respected Mi'kmaw Elder from Eskasoni First Nation in Unama'ki/Cape Breton. He is widely known for his teachings on Etuaptmunk / Two-Eyed Seeing, which encourages learning from both Mi'kmaw knowledge and Western knowledge.

His reflections reminded us that local climate and environmental work is not only technical. It is also about relationship, responsibility, land, water, and future generations.

We are grateful for his time, wisdom, and generosity in joining us, and for the opportunity to continue learning how these teachings can guide our work and deepen our relationships with Mi'kmaw communities and knowledge-holders over time.

New Glasgow Cleans Up Nice!

A group of 26 participated in the community clean up for Earth Day on the Johnny Miles Memorial Trail! Thanks to everyone who participated to keep our community clean!

10 Tables dialogue to bring fresh, action-focused energy to Pictou County Climate Summit

A key part of this year’s Pictou County Climate Summit will be the 10 Tables Dialogue, a one-day facilitated working session designed to bring people together around practical ideas, shared priorities, and stronger local collaboration.

Taking place on May 29 as part of the two-day Summit, the 10 Tables Dialogue will gather people from municipalities, community organizations, businesses, institutions, and the wider community to talk about sustainability in a way that feels grounded in the realities of Pictou County. While the Summit as a whole will create space to learn, connect, and hear from others doing important work, the 10 Tables Dialogue is meant to add something a little different: a more structured, working-style conversation built around local action.

The idea grew out of the “17 Rooms” model, which is connected to the 17 United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. That model is built around separate rooms or conversations tied to each goal. It is a strong concept, but it did not make sense to apply it directly here. Seventeen tables would have been difficult to coordinate, and some of the goals are simply too broad to translate neatly into a county-level working session. Rather than copy the model as-is, organizers adapted the spirit of it into something more focused, manageable, and relevant to this region.

For Rohan, that is part of what makes the 10 Tables Dialogue especially exciting.

“What excites me most about 10 Tables is that it feels like a fresh and more deliberate way to bring people into the conversation locally,” said Rohan. “We are used to events where people attend, listen, and leave with a few ideas. This is different. It is designed as a space where people can actively work through local issues together and help shape what stronger coordination could actually look like in Pictou County.”

The dialogue has been organized around 10 themes that reflect the environmental, social, and economic issues that show up most clearly in local life. These include clean energy and mobility, green jobs and innovation, watersheds and natural assets, biodiversity and recreation, waste and materials management, local food and circular economy, climate adaptation and emergency readiness, health and community resilience, housing and affordability, and belonging and inclusion. Together, the tables are meant to reflect the fact that many of the region’s biggest opportunities and challenges do not sit in isolation.

10 Tables dialogue to bring fresh, action-focused energy to Pictou County Climate Summit Continued

“A lot of what we are dealing with overlaps,” said Rohan. “Housing connects to health. Natural assets connect to resilience. Economic development connects to energy, land use, and community well-being. What I find really compelling about 10 Tables is that it gives us a format to hold those connections in a more intentional way, while still keeping the discussion focused enough to produce something useful.”

Each table will be asked to identify three existing wins already happening in Pictou County, along with three priority projects or focus areas where stronger coordination or shared effort could help move things forward. At least one of those priorities will need to connect with another table, helping the dialogue move beyond siloed conversations and toward a more joined-up picture of local action.

For Rohan, that action-oriented structure is a big part of the appeal.

“I think the innovative part is that it is not just a conversation for conversation’s sake,” said Rohan. “It asks people to recognize what is already working, identify where the real gaps are, and think seriously about where collaboration could unlock progress over the next couple of years. That is the kind of discussion I think people are ready for.”

The table discussions will also be compiled into a follow-up report, creating a shared reference point for Pictou County after the Summit. Organizers hope the report will help capture where momentum already exists, where common priorities have emerged, and where future collaboration could be focused. Over time, it may also help support project development and future funding applications connected to priorities identified through the dialogue.

“Part of the value of 10 Tables is that it does not end when the day ends,” said Rohan. “We are hoping to turn the outputs into something concrete that the County can keep working from, whether that is future collaboration, project development, or funding opportunities tied to priorities that come out of the dialogue.”

Organizers note that the goal is not to rank ideas, create a funding competition, or suggest that every idea raised will automatically move forward. The purpose is to surface what matters, strengthen relationships, and leave with something useful that can support future work across the county.

While the 10 Tables Dialogue is just one part of the broader Pictou County Climate Summit, Rohan says it offers something distinct within the larger event.

“The Summit matters because it brings people together around climate and sustainability in a broader sense,” said Rohan. “But 10 Tables adds a real working layer to it. It gives people a chance not just to hear about good ideas, but to help shape where local action and collaboration could go next.”

The 10 Tables Dialogue will take place on May 29, with the broader Pictou County Climate Summit continuing on May 30. Together, the two days aim to celebrate the good work already happening across the region, build stronger connections, and support more coordinated action in the years ahead.

Emergency Preparedness Week: May 3-9

Emergency Preparedness Week (EP Week) is a national awareness campaign that encourages everyone to take simple steps to stay safe during emergencies. It's a reminder to learn about the risks that may affect your area and take practical actions to help protect yourself, your household, and your community.

Preparing an Emergency Kit

When emergencies like winter storms, hurricanes, fires, or extended power outages occur, it's important to be prepared. Every household should be ready to manage on its own for at least 72 hours.

10 top items to put in the emergency checklist:

- Water - 2L of water per person per day (include small bottles)
- Food that won't spoil, such as canned food, energy bars & dried foods
- Manual can opener
- Wind-up or battery-powered flashlight (extra batteries)
- Wind-up or battery-powered radio (extra batteries)
- First aid kit
- Extra keys for your car & house
- Cash, travellers' cheques & change
- Important documents- identification, insurance & bank records
- Emergency plan - include a copy in your kit as well as contact information

Things to remember when preparing your kit:

- Store the kit in an easy-to-carry container
- Make sure everyone in your household knows where it is
- Check your kit twice a year and replace expired items
- Replace stored food and water once a year

It is also recommended to keep your phone charged and your vehicle's fuel tank at least half full in case you need to leave quickly. Being prepared helps keep you and your family safe during the first 72 hours of an emergency

Emergency Management in Canada: How Does It Work?

In a country that borders on three oceans and spans six time zones, creating an emergency response system that works for every region is a huge challenge. That's why emergency management in Canada is a shared responsibility. That means everyone has an important role to play, including individuals, communities, governments, the private sector, and volunteer organizations.

In Canada, emergency response is handled first at the local level by fire departments, police, and other municipal resources. If local first responders need further assistance, they can request it from neighbouring municipalities or from their Province or Territory. When an emergency escalates beyond their response capabilities, Provincial or Territorial bodies issue a Request for Federal Assistance (RFA) from the Government of Canada, based on their specific requirements.

RFAs are managed through Public Safety Canada's Government Operations Centre (GOC), which is mandated, on behalf of the Government of Canada, to support preparedness for and lead the coordination of the integrated federal response to all-hazard events of national interest. The GOC receives the RFA and, through the implicated Public Safety Regional Office, works closely with the Provincial or Territorial Emergency Management Organization to coordinate the submission, approval, and execution of a request.

Everyone responsible for Canada's emergency management system shares the common goal of preventing or managing disasters.

Fire Cadet Program

The Town of New Glasgow, is pleased to announce a new partnership with North Nova Education Centre, launching an after-school Fire Cadet Program for students in Grades 10–12, beginning in September 2026.

Revitalizing Our Library

The Town of New Glasgow, in partnership with the Pictou-Antigonish Regional Library, is launching a fundraising campaign to support the revitalization of the New Glasgow Public Library and Community Spaces.

The project will transform the existing library facility into a vibrant Destination Centre, bringing together community partners and providing welcoming, accessible spaces for residents of all ages. Planned upgrades include modern meeting rooms, creative and maker spaces, areas for youth and seniors, and programming and collaboration spaces for community groups and nonprofit organizations.

The fundraising campaign has a goal of $4.7 million, which will help create modern, flexible spaces while supporting major building upgrades that improve accessibility and reduce energy use.

“Our public library has always been a place where people come together to learn, connect, and grow,” said Mayor Nancy Dicks. “This revitalization project will ensure the library continues to serve our community for generations to come.”

The campaign is being led by Co-Chairs Wade Sullivan and Emily Sullivan.

“The library has always been a special place in our community, and this project will help create a space where people of all ages can gather, learn, and connect,” said Emily Sullivan.

“We’re proud to help lead this campaign and invite others to join us in supporting a space that will benefit our community for many years to come,” said Wade Sullivan.

A digital booklet outlining the project and ways to support the campaign is available on the Town of New Glasgow website at Library Revitalization Project - Town of New Glasgow
